

There is nothing in this world that can compare to the feelings you get from quietly rocking a baby to sleep. So helpless, gentle, precious and pure are new born infants that staring into their eyes is like getting a little glimpse of Heaven. Sometimes though, even if you are a Christian, you are just not ready for that glimpse and you know you are certainly not ready to be a parent.

Excellent

Some people seemingly do not have an understanding of this fact and want to stop your fundamental right to choose when you are ready and willing to become a mother. They want control over your body and force you into a position that will encompass the rest of your life. They forget that it is best for a child to be born into a family that really wants a baby and is able to care responsibly for it. Therefore, no one should be allowed to dictate what a person will do or will not do with their own body; and this is especially true when it comes to a woman's fundamental right to choose whether or not to have an abortion.

a subtle but clear transition to your thesis.

I want you to understand that being a Christian does not change this fundamental right you have, or mean you cannot be pro-choice and think abortion a valid course of action. The acknowledgement that there is a moral debate between ~~anti-abortion~~^{pro-life}ists and pro-choice groups concerning when a human embryo/fetus becomes fully human, and whether or not abortion is the sin of murder are valid objections that may be keeping you as a Christian from having an abortion. This letter will outline: why the use of Scripture is not a valid argument to keep a Christian from having an abortion, that nowhere in the
