“The kind of people God has brought around us and the leadership quality of these people is exceptional. Even that grew out of the strategic plan. We’re looking for people with calling, giftedness, and experience in their area of calling.” —President Greg Waybright

As an alum or friend of the university, you don’t often see most of the 260 Trinity staff members who work each day to serve the university and its students, and to make Vision 2013 a reality. Flip through the next thirteen pages, and meet seven of the many people who have helped the university take great strides forward.

“I’ll look out my window and see a student walking across the grass, and I think, ‘That student is what this is all about—the end result is not profit but a person.’ It’s an eternal application of your skills. That makes all the difference in the world.”

Senior Vice President of Information Technology and Chief Information Officer Steve Geggie came to Trinity in 2003 with seventeen years of information technology experience, most recently as a partner in one of the largest minority-owned technology firms in the country. When he sensed God calling him away from corporate work, he initially considered coming to TEDS as a student. Then he discovered a position on staff that would allow him to use his experience to benefit the university’s mission.

“I’d asked myself, ‘What does God still want me to do with my life? Where are the most effective places for me to be?’ I felt as though God told me, clearly: ‘Find a place where I’m at work and join them.’ The Lord brought me to Trinity.”

Director of Development Zofia Dripps came to Trinity in 2003 with over twenty years of business experience, most recently as senior manager of national programs for the former AT&T Wireless. There she directed customer-base marketing programs in support of their 20 million customers. It was her annual participation in a spring mission trip to Moldova, where she taught English, that caused her to see the benefit of contributing to the education of the next generation of Christian leaders. In Trinity’s Advancement Office, Zofia focuses on the development of donor stewardship processes and appeals, to increase the Trinity Fund, which is critical to the university’s annual operating budget. She says, “When people ask me if it’s hard to ask for a gift, I tell them I’m never concerned about asking someone to participate in a good thing—and Trinity is a great investment.”

“There is a depth of vision, perspective, and stability in Trinity’s leadership and in the Board of Regents. The TEDS faculty provides the university with a theological stability that I appreciate as well. These are anchors for us at Trinity Law School. Trinity has a vision for transforming the world in Christ in a new way.”

Donald McConnell, JD, has committed his life to the training of Christian lawyers. He has been a faculty member at Trinity Law School since 1988. He’s also practiced real estate litigation, personal injury defense, and commercial shipping litigation, including representation of the Underwriters of Lloyds of London. In August of 2005, Don became the academic dean of Trinity Law School. “There is a need to educate lawyers with a truly Christian perspective on human law, to train them to make a positive difference in the legal system,” he says.

“At graduation last spring, I watched each person walking across the stage and wondered where they’ll go and who they’ll touch. There is a kingdom impact here. What we do—whether custodial or communications work or managing money—we do it all for the glory of God.”

Senior Vice President of Business and Finance and Chief Financial Officer Mike Picha has served in Trinity’s Business Office for seventeen years. It was as a TEDS student in the 1980s that Mike realized God was calling him to finance rather than vocational ministry. As he earned his degree in accounting and his MBA, Mike worked in Trinity’s business office as a general ledger accountant—then student accounting supervisor, manager of accounting, director of accounting, controller, vice president of finance, and, finally, his current role. “God did call me to Trinity,” he says, “but just not in the way I’d expected.”

“What makes me most excited is when a student comes into my office and sits down to talk. I have the opportunity to listen—and we learn from one another. Seeing the potential in each student and thinking about what this means for the kingdom of God, I think—What a privilege! Let me never take this lightly.”

Director of Multicultural Development Orlando Feliciano came to Trinity three years ago with pastoral experience that included a church with more than twenty cultures as well as twenty years of business management experience in the corporate world. Orlando provides Trinity College students with the opportunity to experience different cultures through visits to Chicago-area churches, on-campus speakers and events, and trips. In partnership with Director of Chapel David Whited, he planned the recent “Sankofa Journey,” in which college and divinity school students of different races traveled together to visit historical sites of racial injustice.

“Trinity students represent all different denominations and nationalities. They are a picture of the church coming together. I want to be a part of that—to connect with each person here and their calling, their part in the redemptive story that God is telling. My passion is to see each person become what God intended him or her to be.”

Last year, Dr. Susan Greener became dean of students for the divinity and graduate schools. With an educational background in human and community development, Susan served previously as director of program development for Mission of Mercy, a holistic ministry for children and families in developing nations, and as senior human development specialist for Compassion International. She has conducted workshops and taught classes on human development in more than thirty countries.

“I’ve committed my life to Christian higher education. I think it’s maybe the most effective tool, other than the church, to make a difference in our society.”

Senior Vice President for Planning and Enrollment Roger Kieffer came to Trinity six years ago with twenty-four years of service in Christian higher education. That includes seventeen years of administrative experience specifically in enrollment management, a concept that he has pioneered at three schools, including Trinity. “Enrollment management” means one person provides oversight to the combined areas of admissions, financial aid, registration, and records—ultimately to serve students better. At Trinity, Roger is additionally responsible for Trinity’s extension locations and the strategic planning process.
